Emory University Division of Physical Therapy is seeking candidates for a part-time faculty position at the rank of assistant professor for its expanding Doctor of Physical Therapy (DPT) program. Currently, the Division of Physical Therapy has 15 full-time and 9 part-time faculty members. We are seeking individuals with expertise and passion for clinical education. The position involves working closely with the Director and Assistant Director of Clinical Education on program development, advising students, mentoring clinical instructors, nurturing relationships with our clinical partners, and developing new clinical sites. Candidates must have an earned doctorate degree, have an established record of clinical practice, and be licensed or eligible for licensure to practice physical therapy in Georgia. Evidence of scholarship potential is preferred. Responsibilities for faculty include teaching, clinical practice, scholarly productivity, advising students, and participating in University and professional service. Salary and rank will be commensurate with experience.

The Emory University DPT Program is a top-ranked educational program, consistently ranked in the top 10 by US News and World Report. In addition to being an outstanding educational institution, Emory University is also an important research institution with a wide variety of research centers on campus. Emory University is known for its exceptional graduate program in Neuroscience, for clinical and research programs in stroke, musculoskeletal, cardio-pulmonary, vestibular, and movement disorders; and for joint Georgia Tech-Emory programs. There is an exciting potential for interfacing with resources throughout the Emory University academic medical center, related graduate programs, and the Atlanta community. The Division of Physical Therapy is a component of the School of Medicine and is located on the main campus in close proximity to a variety of affiliated clinical facilities.
